

What needs approval ?

The Development Act says that no development can be undertaken unless it has the approval of the relevant planning authority, which in most cases is your local Council. This means that any construction, alteration, addition to or demolition of a building or structure, a change in that current use of the land, or anything which modifies a designated heritage item, constitutes development as defined in the Act and therefore requires formal Development Approval.

Certain minor activities or building work are excluded by Regulation from this definition and are thereby exempt from the need to seek approval. In these instances you should always contact the Council first to clarify the position. It is pointed out, however, that the scope for these exemptions is quite limited and you should normally expect that an application will be necessary.

The approval process involves separate assessments against the planning policies covering the area in question (known as the Provisional Development Plan Consent (PDPC)) and against the technical standards set out in the Building Code (known as the Building Rules Consent (PBRC)). Collectively, these two provisional consents amount to the formal Development Approval that you require in order to proceed with the development proposal.

It is important to understand that you cannot start work on any development until the relevant authority has issued the Development Approval notice. Otherwise, the Act provides for heavy penalties including exemplary damages and/or a daily fine for each day the offence continues.

How do you go about lodging an application ?

You must complete in full the single application form, which covers all types of development proposals, including both the planning and building components. This form is standard throughout the State and is available from all Council Offices and from the Department of Housing and Urban Development in Adelaide.

The Development Application form, unless it is for land division, is lodged with the local Council, either personally or by post, along with all relevant plans and supporting information. Although the form can be signed by the applicant or by his or her agent, it is in your interests to have the landowner also sign the documentation to avoid possible delays.

Please remember that there are lodgement and other fees that may be applicable to the proposal which must be paid at the time of lodgement. Council can decline to deal further with your application until these are paid. When received, Council can then register the application and proceed with an assessment in terms of the Act.

INFORMATION SHEET N° 4 outlines the type of information required to be submitted with an application.

What happens with your application ?

Council checks firstly that all required information to assess the development is included with the application. If not, then you will be advised in writing as to the nature of the further information that has to be submitted.

Secondly, Council is responsible for undertaking any public notification of the proposal (see INFORMATION SHEET N° 5) and referring the application to other Government Agencies as may be necessary depending upon the type of development and/or its location. The Regulations specify the circumstances when this consultation is necessary. A decision cannot be made until the consultation reports have been received and taken into consideration. The Agencies are required, however, to respond within strict time limits. These reports may be of a mandatory (ie binding on the Council) or of an advisory nature only, again depending upon the type and/or location of the development.

Who makes the decision and when ?

Either the local council or the Development Assessment Commission is the 'relevant authority' charged with the obligation of assessing and issuing approvals. The Minister (in the case of Crown developments) or even the Governor (when an Environmental Impact Statement or a major project is declared under the Act) are also specified as 'authorities' under the Act, but their involvement is the exception rather than the rule. Mostly, it will be the local Council who will be responsible for making decisions.

The Commission is the authority in the following circumstances: -

- where the development is to be undertaken by a Council itself; OR
- the proposal is located in an area not covered by local government; OR
- it is classed in the Regulations as being of State significance; OR
- where a Council has requested the Minister to declare the Commission to act as the authority on an application (and where this request has been accepted by the Minister).

There are set time limits specified in the legislation within which decisions need to be made, depending upon the nature of the development being applied for. Applications for routine developments that require an assessment to be made can generally be dealt with in a short period of time, and in any case within 8 weeks of lodgement (4 weeks for complying developments). Where an application has to be referred to a Government Agency, then the time limit is extended to 14 weeks. For land division proposals, the period is 15 weeks. Whether a decision can be made in less time than these limits depends largely upon the complexity of the proposal and the issues that it may consequently raise.

If a decision is not made within the statutory period stipulated, the applicant has the right to insist (in writing) to the authority that he or she is aggrieved by its failure to deal with the application and, after 14 days have elapsed without a response, is then entitled to apply to the Environment, Resources and Development (ERD) Court for an order directing the authority to make a decision by the date fixed by the Court.

How will a decision be made ?

The assessment of any development must be made on the basis of the planning policies contained in the Development Plan and a decision made accordingly. A Development Plan consent cannot be granted if the authority believes that the proposal is seriously at variance with the Plan's policies. Otherwise, the content and substance of the planning policies provide guidance for the assessment process. A Council therefore determines the suitability or otherwise of development proposals in terms of what the Plan says.

In respect to the Building Rules assessment, the requirements of the Building Code of Australia (BCA) have to be satisfied.

What if you don't like the decision ?

If an applicant is aggrieved by a decision of the authority, eg if the proposal is refused outright or if conditions attached to a consent are unacceptable, then a right of appeal exists to the Environment, Resources and Development (ERD) Court. An applicant generally has a 2 month period to exercise this right - it is not open-ended. NB: no appeal rights are available in the case of decisions made in respect to non-complying developments.

The appeal will be against the authority who made the decision, but where a decision was made or conditions imposed as a result of directions given by a State Agency, then the appeal may also involve that particular Agency. The appeal is lodged directly with the Court itself.

The above information is advisory and a guide only to give you a general understanding of the key points associated with the approval system. It is recommended that you seek professional advice or contact the Council office regarding any specific inquiries or for further assistance concerning the use and development of land. Being prepared can save you time and money in the long run.
